Stress
and how to handle it

Our vision: a society where all people flourish.

Resources
The Mental Health Foundation has a comprehensive range of information on mental health and wellbeing including pamphlets, CDs and videos available to order from our website.

For more information on creating mentally healthy workplaces visit the Workplace Wellbeing section of our website:

www.mentalhealth.org.nz

Contact us
Resource & Information Service
Phone: 09 623 4812
Email: info@mentalhealth.org.nz

Mental Health Foundation
PO Box 10051, Dominion Road, Auckland 1466
Units 109-110, Zone 23, 23 Edwin Street, Mt Eden, Auckland 1024

(09) 623 4810
www.mentalhealth.org.nz
www.facebook.com/mentalhealthfoundationNZ
www.twitter.com/mentalhealthnz

Help us to help others
The Mental Health Foundation is a charity and we rely on donations to support our work. Please consider giving us a donation so that we can continue to help others.

Options for donation can be found on our website
www.mentalhealth.org.nz

Updated March 2020
Other stressors that may arise from the workplace include:
- Overload – too much work, too little time.
- Relationships – conflict with colleagues or boss.
- Conflicts between work roles, job demands, and juggling the balance between work and home life.
- Long hours, shift work, being unclear about work roles.
- Complicated tasks, poor training, feeling isolated or undervalued.
- Changes in role or organisation (e.g. restructuring); lack of communication between managers and workers, or between departments.
- Bullying or harassment.
- Not being able to talk openly about stress, health or mental health problems.
- Physical environment – noise, dirt, dangers, lack of air, poor equipment, messy workspace.

What is stress?
‘Stress’ describes our physical and emotional response to a demand or ‘stressor’ in our environment. Many things that stress us are real, but we can also ‘turn on’ the stress response with negative thoughts, beliefs or attitudes. Sometimes we respond to stressful situations by creating even more stress in our bodies by overeating, smoking, drinking too much alcohol or coffee and not exercising.

Not all stress is bad. Stress is a natural occurrence in life and everyday stress is necessary for growth and development. The human nervous system is designed to cope with a degree of stimulation. Most people enjoy being stimulated or challenged. If we can unwind and recover afterwards there are no harmful effects. The danger lies in too much stress or prolonged stress.

At first we may become tired and irritable but if the stress continues and is not dealt with effectively the result can be physical and mental ill-health. Our stress response may be activated by extreme danger or intense pleasure. More usually, we encounter numerous potentially stressful experiences in our everyday lives such as work, relationships, losses, lack of time, boredom, money worries and many more.

Stress levels are individual – what one person may experience as energising another may find stressful. Taking action on stress may involve managing the stress response and/or dealing with the stressor. Remember that your capacity to cope with stress changes at different times and stages of your life.

How can work contribute to stress?
One of the major causes of stress in the workplace is feeling that things are beyond our control. Advances in technology bring many advantages, but they are also a major contributor to daily stress. People may also find travelling to and from work very stressful.

Make some time for exercise such as walking, swimming, team sports or anything else you enjoy doing.

What are some of the warning signs of stress?
- Losing your zest for life; losing interest in family, friends or work.
- Changes in your sleeping patterns.
- Nervous ‘twitches’ or muscle spasms.
- Indigestion, stomach upsets.
- Pains in lower back, chest, shoulders, joints or other parts of the body.
- Skin itches or rashes for no apparent reason.
- Frequent colds or flu.
- Shortness of breath or shallow breathing.
- Memory or concentration problems.
- Feeling anxious and tense for no obvious reason.
- Finding it hard to make decisions.
- Tearfulness for no apparent reason.
- Feeling impatient or irritable.
- Losing confidence.

Please note that any persistent symptoms should be checked by a GP.

What can I do about stress?
One way to reduce stress is to change the stressor (cause). The most drastic way is to change your environment - where you live, where you work. Of course, this is not often possible. Instead, you can think of changes to those parts of your environment which are causing the most stress.

Another way is to cope differently with stress. Here are some ways to help you reduce and prevent too much stress and tension. But you have to practice!
- Talk your worries over. Talk with a friend, your partner, parents, counsellor or clergy or someone else you trust.
- Limit your expectations. Be selective and use your energy to do the most important and possible tasks. Set goals you can reach. Do not blame yourself if you don’t reach all your goals – these may be possible next time.
- Eat well. Eat a variety of fresh foods in a well balanced diet. Some foods actually cause or increase nervous tension, for example, coffee, tea, chocolate, and soft